Introduction

Congratulations on your position as a research assistant! This role is an important step in your legal career and should be taken as seriously as you would any other employment. We hope that this guide will ensure a successful tenure as an RA.

Each reference librarian at NYU Law is teamed up with a faculty member to assist with their research. Should you run into questions or concerns with your research, feel free to reach out to the librarian assigned to your faculty member for specialized advice. Please check this list to determine which librarian you should contact.

Getting your Assignment

Before beginning a research assignment for a professor, you should know the answers to the following questions to guide your research process:

- Are there any sources or databases in particular I should look at? Are there any sources I should avoid?
- Has anybody worked on this issue before?
- What do you expect me to find?
- In what format do you want the answer? (A memorandum, email, oral briefing, bibliography?)
- How much time do you expect this research will take?
- What is the deadline?
- Would you like me to check in periodically? If so, how often, and in what format?
- Is there a sample document from a previous RA that I could see as an example?

The Research Process

The legal research process, while not always linear, often follows a basic structure that can help streamline your work.

What is interlibrary loan (ILL)?

Interlibrary loan (ILL) is a service to help you obtain articles, books, book chapters, and other research materials not owned by NYU Law School.

What is scanning? (document delivery)

NYU Law School faculty, students, and staff may use ILLiad to request electronic delivery of a book chapter or article in print owned by the NYU Law School Library. The form is designed to allow you to easily paste in citations from databases or other sources, or fill in the information yourself.

To request a scan, please enter SCAN REQUESTED in the "Notes" field of your ILLiad request.

- This service is for the purposes of research or private study only.
- If digital or electronic access is available, the material will not be scanned. Before submitting an ILL request, you should attempt to locate a digital or electronic copy through the NYU Law School Library catalog and Bobst's catalog. You can also contact the Reference Desk for assistance on whether digital or electronic access is available.
- Scans are limited to one (1) chapter in a book or ten percent (10%) of a book or other publication (whichever is less) or one (1) article from a journal issue. For this calculation, multiple requests for scans from the same book will be aggregated.
- We are unable to scan casebooks, textbooks or study aids.
- The turnaround time for scans is approximately 3-4 working days.

The ILL Department also reserves the right to reject excessive scanning requests and any request which may constitute a violation of copyright.

The goal of this Article is to replace the partial view of the third-party doctrine found in existing scholarship with a richer and more balanced account of its costs and benefits. The topic is a timely one: Technological progress places more and more communications in the hands of third parties, and the growing importance of new technologies such as the internet has led to a renewal of the attacks on the third-party doctrine. ...Part I briefly introduces the law of the third-party doctrine and the harsh criticisms of it. Part II argues that the third-party doctrine ensures technological neutrality of the Fourth Amendment by blocking the opportunistic use of third parties to circumvent the basic balance of Fourth Amendment rules. ...Part IV responds to the two primary criticisms of the third-party doctrine, that the doctrine is doctrinally unpersuasive and that it gives too much power to the police. ...INTRODUCTION TO THE THIRD-PARTY DOCTRINE This Part explains the third-party doctrine and summarizes the two basic types of cases: those involving secret agents such as undercover informants, and those involving third-party account records. This Part also introduces the two primary criticisms of the third-party doctrine. The first criticism is doctrinal in nature; it asserts that it is simply incorrect to say that third-party exposure renders an expectation of privacy "unreasonable."⁹ The second criticism is functional; it claims that the third-party doctrine gives the government too much power over individuals.²⁰ 17.

Was foreign arbitral panel a foreign tribunal within meaning of law permitting domestic discovery for use in foreign proceeding? No

Foreign arbitral panel involved in dispute between buyer and seller of two business units did not qualify as governmental body, and thus, was not “foreign tribunal” within meaning of federal statute permitting domestic discovery for use in foreign or international tribunal proceeding, even if arbitral panel was a commercial arbitral panel subject to German law and courts could play role in enforcing any arbitration agreement, since no government was involved in creating panel or prescribing its procedures, but instead buyer and seller, who were private parties, agreed in private contract that private dispute-resolution organization would arbitrate any disputes between them, with each party selecting one arbitrator and those two arbitrators choosing third arbitrator.
